Alyssa Peterson, doctoral candidate in history and philosophy of science at UT-Austin, is the first recipient of the joint History of Science and Medicine Fellowship. This fellowship supports research in the collections of the Clendening Library and the Linda Hall Library of Science and Technology. The duration of the fellowship is one month -- the details of her fellowship, which will most certainly be a hybridized version (partially virtual and partially on-site under controlled conditions) are forthcoming.

Ms. Peterson works at the intersection of health and environment in the 18th c. Atlantic world.
